Hannah Kiesewetter:
Nigeria is a very diverse country. Rich in oil, one of Africa’s largest economies with a strong growth in several sectors, seen as an emerging country but with a population living in extreme poverty. Struggling with a variety of violent conflicts and as a result a high percentage of internally displaced persons (IDPs) while at the same time being a country of destination for refugees from other countries. Being a country of immigration itself although many Nigerians leaving and migrating abroad for various reasons. With Social Work still in its infancy finding its professionality and identity, Nigeria was (is and will be) an interesting country to visit as part of the very first Summer School in September 2018. Some of the insights and impressions will be shared in the presentation.
